Biography

Born: December 28, 1905 in Duquesne, PA
Genre: Jazz
Years Active: '20s, '30s, '40s, '50s, '60s, '70s, '80s

One of the all-time great pianists, Hines was a major influence on Teddy Wilson, Jess Stacy, Joe Sullivan, Nat King...

Genre: Pop

Years Active: '60s, '70s, '80s

Album Review

Soulful Timi Yuro was a chitlin' circuit favorite in the early '60s. Liberty Records released the Californian's self-titled LP after her biggest hit, "Hurt" (redone in the '70s by the Manhattans), exploded. It did ok with a respectable #51 showing on Billboard's album chart. All these songs are anguished lamenters like "Hurt." Yuro's innate heart-tugging delivery emotes the brightest on "I'm Confessin' (That I Love You)," "Trying," and "I Won't Cry Anymore." A simpler setting would have worked better than the dated string arrangements, but you really had to hear Yuro's earthy voice live to fully appreciate her.

Biography

Born: August 4, 1941 in Chicago, IL
Genre: Pop
Years Active: '60s, '70s, '80s

"The little girl with the big voice," Timi Yuro was America's finest white soul singer of the 1960s. Born Rosemarie Timotea Aurro in Chicago...

Album Review

P 131227

If you want more Yuro than what you can find on the greatest-hits collections, this 26-track compilation is the next stop. Drawn primarily from her Liberty material (from both the early and late '60s), it also has a few obscure '70s sides that hold up much better than expected. B-sides, non-hit singles, and album tracks abound, and the songs are of nearly equal quality to her more celebrated performances. It also showcases her remarkable versatility, which may have been both an asset and a hindrance, as listeners found it difficult to match a solid musical identity with that magnificent voice. She does blue-eyed soul, orchestral pop ballads, pop/rock, and country with assurance, but rarely latches onto a classic bit of material.

Biography

Born: August 4, 1941 in Chicago, IL
Genre: Pop
Years Active: '60s, '70s, '80s

"The little girl with the big voice," Timi Yuro was America's finest white soul singer of the 1960s. Born Rosemarie Timotea Aurro in Chicago...

Album Review

If you want more Yuro than what you can find on the greatest-hits collections, this 26-track compilation is the next stop. Drawn primarily from her Liberty material (from both the early and late '60s), it also has a few obscure '70s sides that hold up much better than expected. B-sides, non-hit singles, and album tracks abound, and the songs are of nearly equal quality to her more celebrated performances. It also showcases her remarkable versatility, which may have been both an asset and a hindrance, as listeners found it difficult to match a solid musical identity with that magnificent voice. She does blue-eyed soul, orchestral pop ballads, pop/rock, and country with assurance, but rarely latches onto a classic bit of material.

Biography

Born: August 4, 1941 in Chicago, IL
Genre: Pop
Years Active: '60s, '70s, '80s

"The little girl with the big voice," Timi Yuro was America's finest white soul singer of the 1960s. Her million-selling debut single, "Hurt," introduced a performer of such profound poignancy and depth that many listeners assumed she was a man, an African-American, or both, and while Yuro never again achieved the same commercial heights, her finest records deserve mention in the same breath as Aretha Franklin, Irma Thomas, and the other soul queens of the era. Born Rosemarie Timotea Aurro in Chicago...
